Biography

Patricia Hamill is one of the senior members of the firm's white collar and internal corporate investigations practice, and she serves on the firm's Executive Leadership Team. She has represented Fortune 500 companies and corporate officers or individuals in federal and state grand jury investigations, SEC enforcement actions, and complex civil actions in a wide range of industries including technology, securities, insurance, and healthcare. She also has substantial experience in successfully representing companies in False Claims Act and other whistleblower litigation. She is known as a tireless litigator and strategic thinker who skillfully represents clients who face both criminal and civil liability related to government investigations and related actions. In addition, Ms. Hamill represents court-appointed federal receivers in actions brought by the SEC and other federal agencies to bring third party litigation to recover assets used to compensate victims of ponzi schemes and other frauds. Besides her white collar practice, over the last 20 years, Ms. Hamill has also successfully represented numerous insurance and Fortune 500 companies in the defense of nationwide consumer and securities class action lawsuits as well as other complex commercial litigation.
